ABOUT THE WINE

Ahhh, January, a month full of contractions! It's almost like a hangover month. You've partied your socks off all November and December, your bank account is a little shocked from aforementioned festivities and you're in the phase of the cycle where you're not swearing off good times completely but looking for ways to regain balance and work towards goals in your life. Then throw in cold, snowy, and sunless days and you'd be forgiven for assuming January is a month of cocooning and restoration, but that doesn't mean the party has to totally stop. We're here to supply good wine year-round! We're super excited about this new producer to our market, Flavia Rallo, from Sicily.

"Flavia Rallo—a young wine producer of the fourth generation of the historic Rallo family is interpreting the values of her great grandfather—spreading the culture of good wine and quality products of their territory by completely dedicating themselves to the creation of native Sicilian wines. The passion for work, excellent intuition and commitment have led to the production of natural wines from certified organic fruit, unfiltered, and with very low sulphite contents. These wines, with their lively freshness, come from the historic vineyards owned by the Rallo family since 1860. They are located between Contrada Birgi and Paolini, a stone's throw from the Riserva dello Stagnone and the historic Marsala salt pans. The presence of the sea contributes to the creation of soils rich in minerals and with high sapidity—characteristics that give life to unique wines with Sicilian flavors and aromas. They also work with vineyards on the northern slope of Mount Etna. The vines, between 20 and 30 years old, come from some of the best terroirs on the volcano: the North Slope of Mount Etna, in the Zottorinoto and Puntale Palino contrada of Solicchiata, a hamlet of Castiglione di Sicilia, at 950 meters (3116 feet) altitude and on sandy volcanic soils." - Minimum Selections, Importer

Her wines are insanely good, complex, and come in a liter bottle to boot!

Notes of savory herbs and olives with a plummy dark berry kick!
