ABOUT THE WINE

“Whereas winemaking was a hobby for earlier generations at this domain (a way of winding down after a day's work at the nearby Mercedes-Benz factory), Andi Knauss has long known he wanted to be a vigneron. After wine school and a stage in Austria (where Andi learned how to work organically in the vineyard, and to care for the soil) he took over the reins at Weingut Knauss in 2004, and in less than 10 years, he has developed one of the most important and exciting estates we know of. The vineyards are worked naturally, and winemaking is careful and conscientious. Natural fermentation and minimal sulfur are the norms throughout the range, and some cuvees see no sulfur at all.” - Selection Massale, Importer

The “La Boutanche” line of wines is a cooperative project between Importer Selection Massale and various winemakers throughout the old world and one producer in California. The main criteria for the project was affordable au natural wines in liter format, as the importer saw a huge need for more affordably priced and accessible natural wine. We love this project and its wines but were most impressed with Andi Knauss’ Trollinger in the current lineup. This light and juicy red was an immediate staff favorite, so it was a no brainer it was making a wine club appearance!

Ripe juicy red fruits, with an irony and cigar like undertone. Complex yet crushable!
