ABOUT THE WINE

We've been on a canned wine kick lately! Canned wines may seem suspicious as high-end products, but we believe strongly that great wine can and does come in all packaging forms: cans, bags, boxes, screwcaps, and even liter or large format glass bottles. What really matters is the quality of the wine inside and we've always got your back on that front. Why have canned wines been hitting the spot lately for us? Well, they're super convenient in the summer months when grilling, hanging by the pool, or even for taking out kayaking, but now that fall has hit, we're already enjoying cans by our backyard bonfires and camping trips. They're convenient, more portable, and more sustainable for the earth than traditional glass bottles. Plus, one can is over two glasses of wine, so it's totally shareable and great if you're not expecting you can finish a whole bottle on your own.

So, you can see why we're excited to get you in on the can train and thought why not start with Sans Wine Co., the first producer of single vineyard and variety specific canned wines, who have been making beautifully crafted canned vinos since 2015.

"Relying on natural flavors, native yeasts and the wild process of fermentation," The Sans's Wine Co.'s guiding philosophy when it comes to winemaking is, "Sans additives, Sans Chemicals, Sans Pretense..." "Committed to "beyond organic" wine growing," they ensure the vineyards they oversee, "Use absolutely no sprays and follow dry-farming in lieu of unnecessary irrigation systems; conserving water, reducing energy consumption and enhancing the flavor of the fruit." That conservation mentality carries through to the use of cans, which take less energy to make and transport.

This Carignan absolutely hits the fall spot and would be a great addition to a Thanksgiving dinner table with its slightly herby and spiced tart cranberry vibe. Two cans make a bottle, so we'll let you decide how to crack 'em!

Tart spiced and herb forward flavors of cranberry and raspberry.
